

On behalf of the average American, please regulate more forcefully the persistent and merciless efforts of advertisers who abuse the public nature of our electronic communications, whether it be telephone calls, emails, faxes, or whatever other means. I believe a philosophy of allowing one individual, or one company, to make one call or email at a time. That is, unless a person requests this information be sent to them.

Bring some stability back to the society at large by leveling the playing field. The unsolicited and unwelcome cacophony of marketers in my home must end.

Thank you for your time.
